LOT 311 - Hume Lake 1955

Description

In 1955, Hume Lake was experiencing a season of renewal and transformation. Nestled in California's Sierra Nevada, the lake had just been refilled after major repairs to its historic dam, which had been drained for inspection and resurfacing. The surrounding forest, part of Sequoia National Forest since its acquisition by the U.S. Forest Service in 1935, offered a serene escape for campers, families, and nature lovers. Hume Lake Christian Camps, founded less than a decade earlier in 1946, was gaining momentum, drawing youth and church groups to its scenic shores for worship, recreation, and spiritual growth. With clear waters, pine-scented air, and rustic cabins dotting the shoreline, Hume Lake in 1955 reflected both the enduring beauty of nature and a growing community rooted in faith and outdoor adventure.
